> NORTH-WEST AFRICA.—THE NEW PRO-JECT FOR OPENING IT UP. A correspondent of The Times, writes us fol lows :- It is admitted on all hands that the only practical way to redeem the African continent from the horrors of the slave trade and other evils is to open a direct highway into the interior, and establish depôts within easy access of each other. It is the want of such a highway that has retarded the progress of Ubristianity commerce, civilization, and every wholesome influence in this quarter of the globe, and until this is accomplished in some way we cannot expect the regeneration of Africa or the dovelopment of its commerce. Dr. Livingstone abouted hard to open a communication with the interior, but in van, and Mr. Mackenzie's plan for opening North Central Africa to com merce and civilization was lately discussed at the Mansion-house.

with a population of about 20 millions, are tolerably well known. Park, Denham, Clapthat accomplished by Dr. Barth in the years 1850-55. He gives a full and trustworthy occount of the natural productions, the political and commercial relations, manufactures, the languages and affinities of the tribes, and their religious and moral condition, such as no previous traveller had the opportunity or the necessary qualifications to give; and not only did he fill up, the almost blank lines of the kingdoma already vaguely known, but be penetrated tracts before unvisited. The principal and the most extensive empires and kingdoms of these regions are Bambarra. Bornu, Sokoto, Songhay, Housna, Bagironi, and Maeina: the largest capital cities are Timbuotoo. Sekoto, Gogo, Say, Sego, Kano, Masena, and Hamda Allhi. The inhabitants of these regions are the most intelligent and energetic race in Central Africa. They have arrived at a certain state of civilization, building immense office. establishing manufactories in a rade way, and cultivation the arts of peace so far as t the doctor come out of the house. The doctor are able. Every successive traveller who has replied that he had seen her, and there was no people are in want of European merchandise, and at present give immense prices for it on account of the grout expense of transport.

The principal channels by which they receive goods at present are from Morocoo, Algiers. Tunis, and Tripoli. Caravans proceeding from Morocco have to cross the high ranges of the Atlas mountains and the sterile Desert before they arrive at Soudan. All the other lines are attended with similar inconveniences. besides being subject to heavy imposts and dangers from the tribes through whose countries they have to pass. These journeys are moreover, very tedious, and take months to accomplish; and the caravans can only-bring with them a very small supply of merchandise. No improvement in these roads seems to have been made or attempted since the days of the Ourthaginians and Romans, notwithstanding the difficulties that have to be encountered in traversing over two thousand miles of mountainous and sterile country. According to statistics, no less than about three million pounds' worth of British manufacture finds its way annually from the ports of Morocco Alziers, Tripoli, Tunis, and others, to Soudan. Timbuctoo, the famous city of the Desert situated about eight miles north of the river Nigar, stands about 700ft, above the level of the trade of North Central Africa. It is also the Holy City, and has been for uges the sent of learning for this part or the world; the population being estimated at about 20,000 souls. the northern bend of the river Niger, and from being the nearest and the most convenient point of intercourse with the North. Dr. Barth, who resided about eight months in this city, save :-"This much is certain—an immense field here open for European energy to revive the trade which, under a stable Government formerly animated this quarter of the globe and which might again flourish to a great extent; for the situation of Timbuctoo is of the highest importance, lying as it does at the northern curve or elbow of the great river Western Africa, which in an immense sweep encompasses the whole of the southern baif of

There is a sand-bar across its mouth, which accumulated there on account of the current which sets in here on to the coast. This is no uncommon thing on the West Coast of Africa; there is hardly a river or inlet on on this coast without sund-bar at the entrance. It is also clear that the Belta formed the channel for the ocean, from the researches of Panet. who crossed it in 1850, and also from Moghdad.

The rivers flowing into the how-formed sen from various elevations would cause a conwhich would also aid the same end. If the survey which is to be made of these regionsabould establish the practicability of letting the sea into El Juff. the results will, indeed, be marvellous. It will be the means of improving the climate of the surrounding regions by causing rain to fall on extensive tracts, which only require moisture to cause them to be clothed in luxuriant verdure. It is hardly possible that it would affect the climate of Europe in any way by diverting the hot winde, as was supposed by some, since the area which would be biid under water would only be about 126,000 square miles, while the area of the Desert of Africa is no less than 3,000,000 square miles. The inland sea it is proposed to make would be the means of opening up Central Africa by direct intercourse from England, would bring the interior regions of the great continent within easy distance of Europe, and would open a market of English manufacture without an equal in modern history; since this channel would be the only direct roud into the interior, while the River Niger and its tributarics would establish thousands of miles of navigation through Soudan, and would be the means of redeeming the inhabitants from the fearful horrors of the slave trade, and open feasibility of opening Central Africa from this point. Dr. Barth also points to the north as the only practical way of effecting communication with Soudan. Mr. Jackson, who was many years engaged in trade direct with Tembuctoo from the north-west coast, says :-

A commercial station in the neighbourhood of Cape Juby would effectually open a direct communication with Timbuotoo and Soudan, and supply that immense territory with European manufacture at the second hand, which they now receive at the fifth and sixth. The coast also is safe and healthy, as well as the country between it and Timbuctoo." of this plan in 1819. He says:-

ISMAILIA. Ismailia was evidently intended by M. Lesseps for a big town, and the chief port of the Canal, though his views on this point have as yet scarcely been accomplished. The place, indeed, is admirably laid out. Broad streets with good roads, stately avenues and neatly built houses, meet the eye at every point; and in the handsome square the graces ful palm and banana tree flourish side by side amid a profusion of flowers and shrubs of every kind. Nevertheless, it must be owned that, as -the climate, which on account of its greater dryness is far perferable to that of Port Said or Alexandria, Europeans refuse to settle here in any number; and, pretty as the town is, it fails to attract visitors. Trade is almost unknown, and through there are hotels, cafés, and shops in abundance, yet there appears to be a total absence of persons to manage and of customers to frequent thom; and strange as it may seem. Ismailia five years after the opening of the great-oceanic highway which passes its gates, remains almost without inhabitants-Temple Bar.
